recent proposals for enlarging the european community to include the efta countries raise the question of whether the new members should participate in a european monetary union in part the issue hinges on the incidence of aggregate supply and demand disturbances we use data on prices and output and a var decomposition to analyze this issue empirically grouping economies according to the magnitude of the disturbances their cross country correlation and speeds of response this leads us to distinguish an ec core made up of germany and its immediate neighbors and an ec periphery made up of the uk and the southern european members of the community austria sweden and switzerland behave more similarly to the ec core than do norway finland and iceland this suggests that the case for emu participation is stronger for austria sweden and switzerland than for the other efta countries
